Esot. After spending the last week in California, I've realized three of the most important rules for getting around: Rule #1: Your windshield will be smashed. It's insane. There are no elevators or escalators. But buses and taxis run straight up and down. And the drivers are everywhere. The taxis have their own driver with an iPad for navigation. I asked one of them for directions. He gave me the name of an app. I could have used Google Maps, but I was already on the iPad. As the taxi disappeared around the corner I noticed the driver had the app on his face. I was hit on the side of my head. So many apps. You have to be on top of them. Rule #2: Pull over to the side of the street. This is a lot more difficult than it sounds. I realize, at this point, that the traffic is worse than ever, but there are fewer lanes in the downtown area. There will be no one behind you. This seems to be true in general: the streets are packed with people. You can stand in the intersection and not feel one shred of fear. You can drive in a circle for five minutes and not get anywhere. So pull over and wait for a bus or an accident. Rule #3: Don't get killed. That's not hyperbole. Drivers will do whatever they can to get to where they're going. The vehicles we were in were ludicrous in their disregard for speed or morals. And lots of people ride their bikes. It's remarkable to watch. They're zipping everywhere, even on superblocks. The sidewalks are now separated from the street by bike lanes. So it doesn't matter if you're on the sidewalk, just don't get hit by a car. I'm not going to outline all the rules, because there are too many. I'll merely mention some: Rule #1: Take the bus. Most of the lines are free
