The US State Department has requested $2.4 billion for foreign aid. The Obama Administration's 2014 budget request, the last year of the President's term, is a reflection of how far the United States has declined as a force for good. In the 2014 budget, $3.5 billion was proposed for global health aid, $1.8 billion for military assistance and more than $500 million was set aside for peacekeeping operations. Those numbers are a drop in the bucket when compared to the $600 billion Pentagon budget and $52 billion budget for foreign aid sent to Israel each year. The State Department budget request reflects not only how far the United States has declined since the collapse of the Soviet Union, but also shows how the United States' overseas military operations are now being run by the Pentagon. Ironically, the State Department is the agency that has carried out, or tried to carry out, the United States' foreign policy objectives for the last 100 years. Since the department was created in 1947, it has never requested a budget that has been reduced by more than 11 percent in real terms. The State Department budget has actually grown by about 6 percent since fiscal year 2010. At a time when many Americans do not have enough money to pay their bills and the unemployment rate has reached an all-time high, it is obscene that there is a significant amount of money to spend on an agency that purportedly is to defend the interests of all Americans around the world. US foreign aid is now only used for two purposes: Israel and, to a lesser extent, places where US military personnel are deployed. The agency has been spending about $3 billion annually to support the Israeli military. Furthermore, more than 70 percent of the international aid provided to African nations is either earmarked for military equipment or to buy US military weapons. Most recently af5dca3d97
