This can be done by simply 'turning on' the generalized semiclassical probability distribution at time  $t=0$ :  $\mathcal{P}_{(d)}(s) = \mathcal{P}_{(d)}(s_0) \delta(s-s_0)$ , where  $s_0$  is the solution to the semiclassical equation of motion ( $\mathcal{P}_{(d)}$ ) evaluated at  $t=0$ , and  $\mathcal{P}_{(d)}(s_0)$  is the generalized semiclassical measure on the initial data hypersurface, evaluated at the point where the classical particle is located when we turn on the source. Turning on the heat at time  $t=0$  is thus straightforward for the following reasons: (1)  $\mathcal{P}_{(d)}(s_0)$  is positive definite, i.e., it is a classical probability measure; and (2) the equation of motion ( $\mathcal{P}_{(d)}$ ) can be used as an evolution equation, by applying the chain rule to obtain an ordinary differential equation. This is because the time-varying coefficients  $(a,b,c,d)$  are locally defined in a neighborhood of  $t=0$ ; hence the definition of what is meant by a chain rule is locally valid.[^5] If the heat is turned on at some time  $t>0$  (or at a point
