Why does awk only search for a colon, then print the next 5 lines? UPDATE: I wrote awk -F : '{ print $1 $2 $3 $4 $5 }' to help with this, and that did work well. UPDATE 2: After further fiddling, I noticed that when I have lines that end in a colon, they don't get processed. A: Quoting the docs: -F pattern The -F pattern specifies a field separator, which is a string specifying one or more characters to recognize as a field separator when reading the input. BSD awk searches for the first occurrence of this string in the input, but it does not search for the separator within the fields themselves.

You can change it to: `awk -F : '{ print $1 $2 $3 $4 $5 }'` Or:
`awk -F : '{ for (i = 1; i <= NF; i++) print $i }'`

Q: Executable JAR with additional classes I'm looking for a way to build a JAR that will work in all environments. Currently, we have an executable JAR with all the main classes we would like in it. However, we also have some extra classes that we want to utilize in that JAR. Is there a way for me to package extra JARs in my JAR such that it is available when I execute it? Thanks.

A: You can put your .java files in `src/main/java` and your .class files in `src/main/resources`. Make sure to include the dependent packages in the `packages` field of both.

Q: Should I use "Has" or "Has (ever) been" to connect the present participle to "taught"? "Every teacher I have taught has been incompetent." I am not sure what tense to use to connect the sentence, I can think of two
