You are welcome to download Brosix from this web link Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to programmable logic devices (PLDs), and, more particularly, to a method and apparatus for testing the functionality of PLDs. 2. Description of the Related Art PLDs, including field-programmable gate arrays (FPGAs) and complex programmable logic devices (CPLDs) are commonly used to implement desired logic operations in electronic products. For example, a PLD can receive one or more input signals, and through logic gates perform any number of logic operations, such as AND, OR, NOT, NAND, NOR, XOR, and the like. The PLD is a programmable device that allows the user to program the PLD (i.e., the user programs and writes the bitstream into the PLD) to implement any desired logic function. The user may use a PLD development environment to program a PLD by writing a bitstream into the PLD. In contrast, another type of PLD is non-programmable or application specific integrated circuits (ASICs). An ASIC is a partially fabricated PLD that contains all of the logic gates that are to be implemented on the PLD. When an ASIC is completely designed and fully fabricated, the PLD has been programmed or "burned in," and the PLD is generally ready for customer use. In addition to differing in terms of their programming capabilities, the different types of PLDs have different input/output (I/O) capabilities.

The University is doing this effective immediately due to the coronavirus (COVID-19) and is planning to evaluate the situation from day to day. The University does not have a specific date for reopening. As always, the health and safety of Pennsylvanians is our top priority. We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause in your daily routine. This difficult decision was made only after a detailed, collaborative and coordinated evaluation of the situation that includes University leadership, health experts, senior administrators, faculty and staff and a Board of Trustees. In short, the following factors come together to form the basis for this decision: The health risk to University personnel posed by a return to campus, given the high rate of infection in the community and the varying severity of illness among COVID-19 patients. The health risk to University patients posed by a return to campus, given the high rate of infection in the community and the varying severity of illness among COVID-19 patients, including the possibility of hospitalization. The further health risks for the general public posed by a return to campus, given the high rate of infection in the community and the varying severity of illness among COVID-19 patients, particularly those with compromised health and those who are older, as well as any reluctance of those in the community to isolate themselves. A seemingly disproportionate risk to the community from the spread of the virus when compared to the University's ability to effectively manage the risk of COVID-19 on campus. Additional considerations, including the need to proactively maintain institutional good housekeeping. The expectations of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG), the faculty, staff and the University community. The need for first-rate medical care for University patients, not just the case of COVID-19, but also for other medical and surgical cases at the time and throughout the coming year.
