We use e-mail on our PC, smartphone, mobile phone, Apple computer, notebook, etc. And the basic function that we use is the receiving, sending and organizing emails. However, in our real life, it's not easy to remember all the features of e-mail, so many people are faced with the problems when they use e-mail. A lot of people really hate this thing, so they have to spend too much time to search the destination, to find all the necessary information or to find what they are looking for. This is how the emails are used in the real world: From the open the mail, the user has to input the source and the recipient. The source is the information stored in the e-mail's source. The address is the identifier of the email and the source. Then, the user has to click on the receiver or the sender, so that he can receive the information of the destination. There are also some other functions that users do in our email, for example, we can check our favorite mail, we can download the attachments, or we can even see the newly sent emails. But we will not talk about them in this article. In the above steps, we only pass through the basic functions of the e-mail. So, it's clear that the function of the e-mail depends on many aspects. One of them is how the e-mail client can help us to receive, send and use emails. When we use the e-mail, we often want to make sure that the received emails are always in the order of send. Because it's hard to sort emails out. So we need a program that has e-mail library function and can keep the messages received or sent in the order of send. This will make our work easier and make our life more convenient. After all, I have collected what you should consider when choosing
