The controller is connected to the computer via the input port to receive the print job from the computer. If the print job is to be accepted, the controller and the printer are then connected via the printer port for allowing the printer to generate the printed output in accordance with the print job. Most contemporary input ports are constructed with four lines including three lines (R, G, and B) for reading the data in a format of bi-state data and one line (D) for a power control signal. The printer can include separate logic for receiving data from the printer port to generate printed output corresponding to the print job. In addition to receiving the print job, many modern PC printers also generate a print job for such system by sending the print job to the computer. Such a print job is typically referred to as a "pc-print-job". Since these "pc-print-jobs" do not represent real print jobs, the user may not fully understand how to use them. For example, the user may not fully understand the differences between the print job generated by the printer and the print job generated by the computer.Microwave denaturation of milk proteins in samples with high salt concentrations. The purpose of this study was to investigate the influence of high salt concentrations on the behavior of milk proteins by using microwave irradiation. The samples were treated for five cycles, from 30 to 60 s each, to a temperature of 90 degrees C, and the soluble fractions of milk were analyzed. The results showed that at these conditions, this technique denatures the soluble proteins in less than 20 min. Higher temperatures and longer exposure times may be applied without damaging the proteins. The method showed advantages in the heating of low- c6a93da74d
