What's New In Dashboard-Sidebar Brainfuck?

Dashboard-Sidebar Brainfuck is a simple extension for the free software Dashboard widget engine that allows you to directly edit text in some well known commands of the Brainfuck programming language. This extension is not free software and contains no virus. It is provided as an educational novelty (without warranty). The extension is available for download at: The extension is available for Windows users for free, but can be used only with my Dashboard widgets distribution. The distribution is available at: The extension was developed by Marcello Belforte for the Italian dropbox site: Add the following lines to "App.Desginer.App.XML" After You'll need to remove the "App.Desginer.App.XML" file so that the widget is not overwritten by any newer version. Is there any way to manually change the url, but still use the class to run the command and keep the results? Here is my example of what I mean: (translated from stackoverflow) 1. If there is an error, the script will write "error" into the database, 2. then if it works properly, the script will write "success" into the database. I just want to do the first part manually, so the script is working properly. Thank you. At 2:30 am on April 30th, there was a large earthquake in the Philippines. I just got up to check my mail and saw that my script has been updated by a donation of 0$, just like a child, and I was very happy, but... I am not a child, so I don't understand what that button means, it says "Congratulations!!!". Is that button just to help me out? If so, where can I find the button? If not, please explain what is that button for, thank you. At 2:30 am on April 30th, there was a large earthquake in the Philippines. I just got up to check my mail and saw that my script has been updated by a donation of 0$, just
