As I know there's no "turn-based strategy game" that is named "Betrayal at House on the Hill" (or BnH). So I gave my idea about that. My Idea: Turn-based strategy and you're a ruler of a small, chaotic tribe that is split into 2 factions: Culture - Commoners worship the Gods, have no new ideas and only remember the history of their tribe. Most of them are farmers that live in happiness. Some of them are wise scholars and healers. Holy - Holy people worship the Gods and have been rescued by their gods. They are skilled warriors and has more free thinking. They only remember the history of their tribe. The main enemy is a demon from the underworld. Their objective is to kill the holy people and destroy their tribe. Now you have to make a decision: How to increase the chance to survive long enough to rule your tribe? Or how to create the military power to destroy the evil and grow your holy people. In every sector you can build the following buildings: Houses - helps to increase the population. It creates 2 people of every type (male and female) for every house you have. After few turns of growing your tribe you will have a lot of people, but there will be not much food. Temples - increase the population. It creates 4 people of each type (male and female). It increases your holy people's skill. It is helpful for the creation of a wonder. Wonder - increase the population. It increases your tribe's skill. When you build a wonder it will always belong to your tribe (There's no random generation, you will get the same wonder every time you build it). It can be destroyed by demons, if you have the right equipment to do it. But it increases your people's skill. Mine - increases the population. It creates 8 people of every type (male and female). It increases your tribe's skill. Guarded Temple - increases your tribe's strength and keeps your wonder as your own. But the trade with your empire is cut. Also you can send your whole army (both holy and commoners) to one sector. Guarded Mine - increases your tribe's strength and keeps your wonder as your own. But the trade with your empire is cut. Also you can send your whole army (both holy and commoners) to one sector of the pelvis in rheumatoid arthritis: a classification and review. Among gait abnormalities in rheumatoid arthritis, pelvic deformity has been described least extensively. The authors delineate three types of deformity in the pelvis and review their frequency and demographic and clinical characteristics. A retrospective review of 153 patients seen during a 3-year period who met American Rheumatism Association criteria for rheumatoid arthritis and who had available radiographs of the pelvis was performed. The pelvic deformities were classified as anterior, lateral, or posterior. Clinical findings were evaluated for each type and compared with the available radiographic features. Types of deformity were present in 69% of patients. Rheumatoid arthritis (RA) patients with deformities of the sagittal pelvic elements (lateral or anterior) had a significantly greater joint deformity score than RA patients with no deformities. Anterior pelvic deformity was associated with intercurrent trauma, but that for lateral and posterior deformity was not. Pelvic deformity is a common finding in patients with rheumatoid arthritis. Although evidence is limited, pelvic deformity of the lateral or anterior type was associated with a greater extent of joint deformity than was pelvic deformity of the posterior type.Meditation pad for indicating and reporting habits of Vietnamese people People in Vietnam tend to sit in their offices, homes and cars for eight to ten hours every day to spend their time and relax, so the chair in which they sit should be comfortable. Especially, after work when people commuted by motorbike, sitting is a very common thing. Therefore, we thought of trying another hobby about sitting on a meditation pad. During the entire day, the Pad is an obligatory companion. Simply relax on it and suddenly, the Pad emits a warning bell. The time has come to get up! 1. Choosing material and colorsChoosing a stainless steel material and colors is the principle of the design. On the surface of the stainless sheet, we decided to print letters so that the user can not help but notice. One way is to print the name of the letter on the steel. For example, from the name of "Chiếc "the pad comes "Kang". Print on the pad often brings to mind the name of the home in which the pad is in use. Because the pad is so small, just two things have to be printed. Therefore, we thought that the word would be
