Powering the MotionBuilder Live Set for Autodesk 2012-2016.Q: Drawing to a WM_PAINT in a WindowsFormsHost (UWP) I have an AppBar that contains a WPF custom tooltip. In a normal WindowsFormsHost I've created this tooltip in the click event of a Button. Now I want to use this in a WindowsFormsHost in a UWP. This UWP will be running in different scenarios so the tooltips should appear and disappear as it needs. I have tried to draw to a pictureBox that I've placed into a WindowsFormsHost, but nothing is displayed on the screen. private void button1_Click(object sender, EventArgs e) { var canvas = CanvasHelper.FromPixel(this.MainWindow.Left, this.MainWindow.Top); canvas.Freez(); var bmp = new BitmapImage(); bmp.SetSource(canvas); pictureBox1.Image = bmp; }

I find the selection of text that I want to work on is a slow (if not impossible) process. What I would like to be able to do is change to a visual selection mode, execute a keybinding, and then either select all text that matches the keybinding or allow me to keep typing to continue selecting as I type. Does anyone know a way to do that? A: What you want is either g+q or g+r. There are plenty of reasons to prefer these commands (see Vim Hotkeys and How to Use the Visual mode) but since you're asking for a "key-binding" I'm going to assume that you're more interested in learning the fundamental use of the :help visual-ex command than in learning all the shortcuts and what they do. So in the command mode (i.e. when you're in insert mode or in the command line), you could hit g+q to select everything. If that's not what you're looking for you could define a keystroke mapping in your vimrc file. The :h mksexion command will help you on this. For example if you want to map g+q to do the same thing you could define this mapping in your vimrc map g+q :vimgrep /> / " You can also map g+q to do something more powerful than just copying the visual range to the command line. map g+q :call cursor2line(^(^) 6d1f23a050
