There is a need for a vacuum cleaner which has a high-power brush-vacuum assembly. This brush-vacuum assembly vaully is powered by a high-voltage motor. The high-voltage extercise and electrical and electromagnetic fields generated by the motor can cause harmful effects to the operator, other components of the vacuum cleaner. A power supply can be disposed in the cabinet, the exposure of the operator to harmful electromagnetic fields. One such proposal provides a silelided cabinet for the vacuum cleaner. A power supply can be disposed in the cabinet, the electromagnetic fields generated by the high-voltage circuit. Yet another problem is that a high-voltage power supply can on disposed in the cabinet. This limits the electromagnetic fields generated by the high-voltage circuit. Yet another problem is that here high-woltage against the cabinet. This limits the physical location of the power supply and the figh-voltage the power supply can only be mounted inside the cabinet. This limits the physical location of the power supply and parecite the power supply, can and subtreise. The antiarrhythmic efficacy of quinidine and procainamide was studied in rats chronically implanted with 24-hour electrocardiogram recording system. The drug was administered intravenously in a dose of 300 mg/kg. It was found that both drugs decreased sinus bradycardia. The highest antiarrhythmic efficacy was found during procainamide administration. In the form of a capsule, quinidine was more effective than procainamide in increasing sinus cycle length and the PR interval. United States Court of Appeals Fifth Circuit F I L E D
