Kami River The Kami River (; Amis: ᐃᓂᓂᓂᓂ ᐃᓂᓂᓂᓂ; Sámi: Ìra Káára; Old Norse: Kami ár) is a river in northern Sweden and northern Norway, and has its source in the Kola Peninsula, north of the city of Narvik. The river flows in the north and northwest, from there into the Barents Sea, through the Barents Sea, before emptying into the Varangerfjord, the fjord on the north side of the town of Varanger, in Finnmark county, Norway. The Kami is the longest river with a continuous watercourse in Finland, and the longest one to flow into the Arctic Ocean. The river gave its name to the region where it now flows, which became part of Finland in 1920, and to the administrative district where it flows into the Varangerfjord, which was separated from the old Finnmark county in its own administrative district in 1967. Location The Kami is the longest river in Finland and one of the longest rivers to flow into the Arctic Ocean. In Finland, it lies at the northern limit of the Åsarjoki basin, which drains the eastern third of Finland to the North Sea. The Kami's drainage area,, is only slightly smaller than that of the much larger River Neva in Finland. One of the many smaller and short rivers of Finland, the Kami is about 25 km in length and only reaches an altitude of about 200 m. Its drainage basin includes the territories of the municipalities of Liperi, Muonio, Utsjoki, Inari, Uukuniemi, Sevettijärvi, Joensuu, Luumäki, Joensuu, Kajaani, Akaa, Uusimaa, Uusikaupunki, Tornio, Lahti, Im
