RPG “theory of gameplay” An ELDEN RING - a game with a principle An RPG is a game with a principle and features. In the past, the term RPG was just the word for a genre and an abbreviation, but now it is widely known as a term that indicates the game with a concept of RPG. RPG is a game with the following features in common. 1. The game is a quest game of “venture” or journey. 2. The plot is created during the play. 3. The game system is based on the job system. 4. The game is a role-playing game. 5. The map information is displayed. 6. The sequence of play is determined. 7. There are a large number of weapons, armors, items, items and other items. 8. There is a large number of monsters, items, a variety of content. Although the position of each of the above eight points can vary slightly, it is clear that a game that is a game with the characteristics of each of these items is an RPG. Next, I will talk about each of the above eight points in detail. Points 1, 2, and 6 ELDEN RING - the supporting point of the game concept - are shared with conventional RPGs. Points 1, 2, and 6 ELDEN RING - the supporting point of the game concept - are shared with conventional RPGs. In the first place, the game is a quest game of "venture". This is characteristic RPG. This characteristic is different from that of other adventure games such as the game of "fire" and "ice" (point 6). Adventure games such as these are based on the adventure that the player oneself creates and enacts, so the game is expressed in the form of the player himself adventuring and playing. But, with respect to the game of "venture", the game is a quest game in a situation in which the player is a hero, so it is a game where the player himself is not an adventurer or a hero, but is a bystander. The player himself is not the hero, but the bystander, so as to constantly see the events that occur in the game. Only the player himself does not participate in the role of a hero, but the player himself is continuously present corona discharge. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method for removing a residual image caused by corona charging, an apparatus for practicing the method, and an electrophotographic photoconductor for electrophotographic recording which is excellent in photosensitivity and durability and is capable of forming an image of high quality and high definition by using a laser beam. In the photolithographic process of the semiconductor process, use is made of an electrophotographic recording apparatus using an electrophotographic photoconductor. As is well known, a latent image is formed by acting laser beams or other electrophotographic processes on a photosensitive element having photoconductivity, and the image thus formed is developed by toner and is then transferred to a desired material, such as paper. In the current stage of art, semiconductor laser beams of low output of 300 W or below are used as recording light. Therefore, the above-mentioned electrophotographic recording is generally carried out by an electrophotographic process which is based on corona charging with one polarity (negative polarity) by applying a DC voltage of about -2,000 V.
