Q: REACT - Is my Current implementation of redux-like state management correct? I am trying to understand "How to implement Redux-like state management in React" by Tim Dorsey and Frank Ohls. I am going through the code and trying to understand how they've implemented the state management. My current implementation of the TodoItem component looks like this:

```
import React, { Component } from 'react';
import Link from '../Common/Link';
import { TodoList } from '../TodoList/TodoList';
import { connect } from 'react-redux';
interface TodoItemProps { id: number; text: string; completed: boolean; } export interface TodoItemState { completed: boolean; todoText: string; } class TodoItem extends Component { constructor(props: TodoItemProps) {
    super(props);
    this.state = { completed: false, todoText: "", };
  }
  handleToggleCompletion() {
    const { id, text } = this.props;
    this.setState({ todoText: text === 'complete'? '' : 'not yet',
```
