Kapow Industries is the world's premier free-to-play collaborative generation, powering over 30 million users around the world with their unprecedented strategic experiences. The design of Blue Time is fully modular, allowing players to create incredible gamelayers for their custom-made titles. The New Generation Blue Time is a next-gen game platform with a new concept in which players generate content to make the game. Real-time collaboration creates a seamless world where players are responsible for their story-line, action, and characters in the same way that they're creative with their weapons in Overwatch. The Missions System Players can collect and develop their missions, the heart of the game, to engage in a 'War of the Genres'. Missions are generated by the players and feature different game-stages, cooperative missions, and fast-paced PvP action. Further content can be acquired or crafted through the Blue Time Market system. The Tenants Featuring a voice acting system and the most immersive graphics, Tenants allows the player to create a diverse lineup of AI characters who will engage in various strategic battles with their owner in a quest-based narrative. Tenants can be employed both in PvE and PvP combat. The Skirmishes Skirmishes are a strategic PvP mode. Tenants can be enlisted to travel with a player, engaging in various battles on different maps. Different weapons and gadgets can be found and acquired, while a Randomized Battle system makes even more exciting a hit and run scenario. Skirmishes can be played in between missions in free-form or in a 1v1 Battle. The Hangouts Via the hangout system, players can gather and form hangouts using personal and shared Tenants, who will be playable in different game-stages. The user interface is fully customizable, offering a great level of customization. The Landmarks Players can travel to special locations where they can interact with objects from the environment to enhance their game. Landmarks can be explored and customized by the player, and Tenants can be earned there as well. Note Development Progress is a work in progress Development Progress Blue Time currently has the following gameplay and features: -Mission System - Players generate missions from game-stages, collect and develop missions to engage in PvP/Co-Op matches -Tenants - AI characters generated by players, tasked in creating a world for the players -Skirmishes - A strategic mode of PvP combat

I was able to make my control as a TextBox (set IsReadOnly="True") but the text which I am trying to show is long (sadly cannot edit this) so I want just the part of the text in the control (label) visible while the rest of the text is hidden. I am trying to make something like the Twitter status with all the text in the status visible but without the textbox. A: Is it possible to put your content in the Label tag? I think it will work fine. Here is some more info on the Label control (MSDN).

What's new in Fantasy Grounds - Lemurian Legends: The Complete Adventures (Barbarians Of Lemuria):

's top 5 essential time crises There's a notion in crisis negotiations that the first 24 hours of negotiation are the most critical and bear more weight than other stages of the process. That's not surprising, given the stakes. If someone's life is on the line, and things don't happen quickly after a threat is made or a crime occurred, there are almost no punchers left in the game. Among the best examples of this classic crisis response principle is David Machin and John Knowles' case study of the Dunblane school shooting, in which they argue that the first 24 hours of negotiation are the key to whether the crisis is overcome (col. 1, p. 58). I've been reflecting on crisis bargaining and the roles of key actors over the past several days. My most vivid memory was from an afternoon several years back when I was in my group's Boston office finishing up an intense 72-hour negotiation with the FDIC. While we were getting to the last hour of the process, one of the FDIC's negotiators and I were talking about how this week had gone and about how the FDIC had not taken any detailed notes. I expressed some consternation about that. "That's okay -- it's worked out," he said, pointing to a document on the table with his finger (peaking is so much more efficient than gesturing with an entire arm). "What are we doing now?" I asked. "Relax; it's worked out!" he replied with a grin. "Basically we've just been talking." I nodded, but it also struck me that this exchange reflected that core aspect of crisis bargaining: before anything is put in writing, it's usually worked out by listening to each other and telling one another what you need. If the conversations focus on just talking, as they often do when negotiators are in a discussion mode and not exploring the main parties' positions, then more likely than not, the discussions have ended as they began, with the two sides continuing to talk with each other. That's not to say that negotiations won't continue, but they won't be as efficient because they will also be more likely to miss other critical matters that warrant discussion. And if they miss such issues, then they are likely to be out of the way -- something they want to avoid at all costs. This is not to indicate that crisis negotiators have to discuss everything in real time. In fact, productive negotiators
