FIFA's presentation and gameplay demos both highlight the improvements and changes from FIFA 21. The standout features include a return to customisable control method options and a more responsive passing system to reinforce the holistic development of the game. FIFA 22 also brings a new Focus Mode, improved Player Impact Engine and improved melee/headers. Along with the new features, FIFA 22 will also feature a host of new leagues and competitions, which include a new European Super League, the return of the 2018 FIFA World Cup (with improved features), leagues in South America, Asia and Africa, along with a host of other new competitions. A variety of new features are included in the brand new "Ultimate Team" mode, including a new "Equaliser" function which allows players to instantly create custom formations and redefine their tactics, along with enhanced rewards for completing challenges and more ways to earn cards. Here are some of the highlights revealed in the developer's presentation: Regional Leagues Development director Andy Tidswell revealed that regional football was key to the development of FIFA, with the original incarnation of the game focusing on the English FA, allowing the team to learn from the real-world mechanics of players and stadiums before moving on to international competitions. Vancouver Whitecaps midfielder Brek Shea also chimed in on the importance of regional leagues, including the Canadian Premier League and the new Euro Super League. The league, which includes teams from across Europe, will be based in part on the sport played in the Netherlands and Belgium, and it's scheduled to begin operations in April of 2020. The news came during a presentation detailing the FIFA 22 team's new Vancouver studio, which is also the home of its Vancouver Whitecaps, as well as the Seattle Sounders, Toronto FC and Toronto Arrows. "You need to understand the local area to make a game that resonates with the people who live there," Tidswell said. "We've been a part of a lot of leagues and competitions, but we really wanted a local league to understand how soccer played out here in Vancouver." The presentation included a live demo featuring Vancouver Whitecaps FC star Brek Shea, who played a match in the brand new 'Vancouver City Stadium' in the EA SPORTS FIFA 22 Beta. Shea was joined by the developers in a demonstration of the new Region-based approach to the game, including a new "Equaliser"
