Hey, I just uploaded an awesome video for Friday Fun: Super Mario Bros. Structural and serological characterization of a murine retrovirus. Based on serological data, molecular size of the murine ecotropic virus and a cell strain susceptible to the virus, EO-MLV, have been proposed as ADV-6 and MLV-4, respectively. The completion of sequence has allowed us to define the proviral genome of EO-MLV as 7.4 kb including an LTR and three major open reading frames (ORFs), one on the U3 (encoding 5' exonidase) side (gag) and the others on the U5 side (encoding the structural proteins) of the LTR (Fig. 1). EO-MLV is a member of the SSV group of the gammaretroviruses (SRV-1).

Source analysis of CT scans of the brain as a function of gender and pathologic diagnosis. The objective of this study was to determine whether gender and pathological diagnosis in the diagnosis of Alzheimer disease (AD) and non-AD dementias and stroke can be distinguished using CT patterns of brain atrophy. This study included 177 subjects (89 men and 88 women) seen at the Memory Disorders Clinic at Wake Forest University Medical Center from 1992 to 1996 with clinically diagnosed dementias or stroke. The dementias were classified into AD, multi-infarct dementia, dementia with Lewy bodies, and other; the stroke was classified into cortical stroke and lacunar stroke. Atrophy patterns were quantified on CT scans obtained at the time of initial visit using a previously validated method. Using a recursive partitioning algorithm, the data were grouped into subsets that maximized the subject-wise differences in distribution of diagnoses and regions of atrophy. Gender was unable to discriminate between AD and non-AD dementias. All non-AD dementias were distinguished from non-AD strokes, regardless of gender. Men with strokes were not discriminated from women with strokes. Patients with lacunar stroke were distinguished from those with cortical stroke in all gender groups. These results suggest that gender is not a factor in diagnosis of AD or non-AD dementias and that lacunar stroke is a feature of the acute infarct
