Hi! My name is Gabe and I am a robotics and programming nerd. Robotics nerd would be a more accurate way of saying it. One day, I decided to combine my two favorite hobbies of robotics and game design into one amazing platform. And thus, Roblox was created. Features: To start off, this game is very much in beta. I'm probably going to add features on a weekly basis until the game is complete and bug free. I want to make sure everything is working properly before adding new things so that new users have an easy time when they launch the game. I have a lot planned for Roblox and this week I'm adding some new platforms, a new battle mode, and new creative tools. There are several ways to play the game! There are two main components: platform and engine. The platform is the base structure of the game, and the engine is the programming language you'll use to create your games. Platform can be as simple as a board or it can be as complex as a virtual city. The engine can be as simple as a text editor or it can be as complex as a game engine. Platform The platform is the base structure of the game. It contains a bunch of common pieces that we use to make each game. These include an interactive map (aka menu system), blocks, buttons, etc. Each platform will have one or more of these elements, but they aren't all required. Engine The engine is the programming language we use to create and play our games. You can create different types of games with a variety of different programming languages. Which Platform and Engine Should I Use? The platform and the engine are like your body and your muscles. They are the tools that you use to create and play games. With the right tools you can create virtually anything. There are a ton of different platforms and engines out there. The decision is up to you. The only requirement is that if you decide to start a game, you should use the platform and engine you're most comfortable with. They're both relatively easy to use and have pretty good tutorials. If you're confused on any part, just do some research online. You don't have to be a ninja! What is my first game going to be? It
