We have investigated the effects of quercetin, a natural bioflavonoid, on mast cell degranulation induced by isoproterenol in mice. Mice that had received isoproterenol (100 mg/kg body weight) twice a week for 6 weeks showed increased mast cell degranulation in cardiac tissues, and the platelet-activating factor (PAF) level in the serum. On the other hand, isoproterenol-treated mice that had received quercetin (50 mg/kg body weight) daily for 2 weeks showed a significant reduction in the level of mast cell degranulation and the PAF level in the serum. Furthermore, quercetin abolished the increase in the levels of thromboxane A2 and the decrease in the levels of prostaglandin E2 in the heart tissue. These results suggest that quercetin may have the therapeutic potential against inflammatory diseases and cardiac disorders, including myocardial ischemia, due to its inhibitory activity against mast cell degranulation. The report will be an online resource for key data and research on how Americans engage with the government on public issues and how that engagement relates to their political views. The Citizen Engagement Index (CEI), which the Pew Center will launch in late 2012, will look at public perceptions of government, expectations of elected officials, and the public's sense of being "followed," "ignored," and "misrepresented." More importantly, it will measure the degree to which citizens are motivated to engage politically on behalf of their views, the issues that they care about, and the policies they favor. This year's report includes an interview with CEI creator David Winston, who tells us why the index was developed, and what will come out of it. It also shows how politicians, regulators and policy makers can use data on how citizens engage to better understand the public's views and determine what to do about them. The index is designed to help policymakers get closer to a consensus around political issues. The CEI's methodology differs from other tools designed to measure citizen engagement and interest in the government, like those run by the Harvard Berkman Center and the American National Election Studies, or ANES

What's new in Little Square Things:

There was a rumbling in her stomach and she instinctively took a closer look at her white leather gloved hand. Her bracer on her wrist had the emblem of The Third Order. She looked down at her feet and saw a pair of black leather boots with the Order's emblem prominently mounted on the back of the left toe. She looked to her right and saw a somewhat familiar face wearing his Order's emblem. "Are you going to do as I say, or shall we find out in a fight?" He asked waiting to see a response. There was a slight twitching of her jaw and she narrowed her eyes as she looked up at him with a familiar expression in her eyes of defiance. "You bet I will." She nearly yelled. "Excellent." He smiled and leant forward just a little. "Sister?" A middle aged shabby man wearing a green cloak, which had a faded emblem on the back came into view standing next to her. "Arrogant , " She hissed. There were a few pleasantries to be exchanged and the people who was waiting around them were ushered away into a nearby room. It was a long tube of metal with heavy iron doors with few windows. She looked around at the tubes; a whole big canvas stuffed with tubes and secured by multiple heavy chains. "You trying to create another hell where angels can't exist?" She asked "Yes, I am." "So you can create an angel with the memory of his mortal body-" "Then what?" She nearly spit. "We see any angels-" "Then we will kill them." She finished "That won't be wise." "Yes, I know." She countered "What is the outcome we are expected to create angelic warriors who will put down a host of other angels? Is this worthy?" "It is a worthy goal-" He said interrupting her "-and the sacrifices of angels are a worthy goal, but we must be careful in our victory-" "Sacrifices? Isn't that what you call it? When you
