It is on a shared host and I need to relocate to a VPS and it seems like the ideal solution to my problem. I have a question about whether it will work or not. I intend to test out the application in the new environment. However I don't have a "real" GIT server to test it out on. What is the easiest way of doing this? Will I need to download GIT and basically run it as a GIT server and if so does anyone have any tips about getting it working? A: If you do not have a git repository to test on, I would suggest you set up one (or two) on your new server as it's much easier (and cheaper) to clone a repository locally than it is to push to a remote repository. Once you have a clone, you can work from it and testing out your application should be fine. As mentioned, you can use any of the open-source git solutions for Windows. I use the TortoiseGit GUI but that's not mandatory as you can run the console version also. Btw, you really don't need to download/install git, TortoiseGit does the job just fine. Q: Getting ColdFusion 10 Restricted in prod Getting "Error 500" when getting to any page. The base URL to all pages is "/;maxConnections=1". The server is SBS 2012 (admins are all SBS'ed). All queries seem to be returning proper results. Trying to set the maxConnections to 100 yields a "Security error in connection to database server SELECT c6a93da74d
