I'm new to Scala and the REPL, and I'm using it to learn the language. One thing I find annoying is that when I type "hello world" into the REPL, it appears. I'd like to avoid this. Is there a way to turn it off? A: I'm assuming you're using SBT. This is explained in the scala-docs. A: It is explained in the doc. When starting the REPL, the shell script executes a root operation that may launch an interactive console (the shell script of the sbt console is named ~/sbt-launch.sh). Since the console is the target of the root operation, a user can arbitrarily redefine the root operation or interrupt it to prevent output of the sbt session. # Build a static site with vue-cli-plugin-nextjs !NPM
