I have an array of strings: @('C:\LongPath\File.txt', 'D:\LongPath\Long2\File.txt') How do I remove the C:\LongPath\... and D:\LongPath\... text from the string array? I used the answer by @John in this thread. It works great in this scenario: $files = @('C:\LongPath\File.txt', 'D:\LongPath\Long2\File.txt') $files -Replace "D:\LongPath"," But it doesn't work in this scenario: $files = @('C:\LongPath\File.txt', 'D:\LongPath\Long2\File.txt') $files -Replace "C:\LongPath"," I believe because Replace uses $Matches.Index as the index into the original array $files. I am trying to use the answer with this syntax: $files -Replace "C:\LongPath"," Any idea what I need to do? Thanks A: Try using -replace with a regular expression in the search string. This will cause -replace to iterate over the array instead of treating the array as a single string (the search string). $files = @('C:\LongPath\File.txt', 'D:\LongPath\Long2\File.txt') $files -Replace ("C:\LongPath", ") Nepcon is a monthly conference for senior active drug research and

A: Yes, that IS a Japanese import and legally speaking, it's an illegal rip as far as I'm concerned. There is no legal way to obtain the content digitally. I am not aware of any authorized site that contains it or could. I have tried to find it, but can't. This is a scan with no English subs because the subs would be against international copyright laws and I can't obtain them. So, in a legal way, it's an image of a book cover. You can purchase it, but legally, it's illegal because it was done without the consent of the creator(s). There are scans of the actual book online. This link may be a good place to look. This is the only legitimate way to get a copy. Note: There is a Japanese import which is legal. MOSCOW (Reuters) - Russia has conducted its first rocket launch with the engine it hopes will power its next-generation Angara passenger and cargo carriers, the Interfax news agency reported on Thursday. The deal was finalised in July following a six-month trial launch of a Progress MS-13 rocket with the engine, Interfax said. "The test showed that the engine operates in the planned ranges and will soon be put in operation," Interfax quoted a source close to the state space agency Roscosmos as saying. Russia is under Western sanctions over the conflict in Ukraine and has also been hit by a slow economy. The Angara, to be developed by Russia's United Engine Corporation, will compete against the U.S.-made RD-180 engine that powers the space shuttle and will be initially used to launch Russia's new Soyuz-2.1b heavy rocket.
