Preparation of thin-slice human osteo-chondral spheroids: evaluation of culture medium components on cartilage production. To investigate the potential of human osteo-chondral spheroids as a source of cell-based cartilage grafts for clinical cartilage repair and to determine the effects of medium components on cartilage synthesis. Biomass of osteo-chondral spheroids was collected from femoral condyles of four different donors. Six different concentration combinations of medium components, in addition to glutamine and ascorbic acid were tested. Biomass was produced in three consecutive weeks in vitro. The cell number, and DNA, glycosaminoglycan and collagen content were measured. Eighteen out of 32 different medium compositions were evaluated. The best combination of medium components was a mixture of insulin, ascorbic acid, dexamethasone, transferrin, selenium, hydrocortisone and proline (IADD) containing 10 ng/ml of insulin, and 4 nM of ascorbic acid.

Under these conditions, both DNA and glycosaminoglycan concentrations were 2.4 times higher in comparison to medium without supplements (MD), and the biomass was sufficient for clinical purpose. The collagen concentration was highest in the IADD medium. The evaluation of multiple medium components showed that the culture medium system is a key element in cartilage production and maintenance. The study showed that spheroids can be used as an interesting cell source for scaffold-free cartilage reconstruction.

AUGUSTA, ME—Noting the heavy stores of insulin a diabetic might need in the coming winter, health officials said Thursday that they should begin warning sufferers of arsenic poisoning as well. “We recommend that people with diabetes—who are at risk for lead poisoning from mercury exposure—always carry a small bag of rice arsenic, which will keep them going through the long, grueling winters ahead,” said Maine Department of Health and Human Services Director Margaret Joy Toderian, adding that the mix of sodium sulfate and calcium sulfate would be sufficient for even the most sophisticated diabetic to keep them going for weeks on end. “Even if they can afford to buy their own insulin, we advise people to take 20 grains every 24 hours. Rice arsenic is sure to last them through the end of the month.” According to officials, it is extremely important for diabetics to have a mix of electrolytes on hand, even if they are feeling no signs of dehydration.

The caspase-3 inhibitor, Z-DEVD-FMK, inhibits xylosyltransferase II-induced apoptosis in mouse MC3T3-E1 preosteoblast cells. Caspase activation and apoptotic cell death have been implicated in the pathogenesis of periodontitis. We examined the effect of the caspase-3 inhibitor, Z-DEVD-FMK, on the cell cycle distribution and on the cell death of MC3T3-E1 preosteoblast cells. We compared wild-type (WT) and caspase-3-deficient MC3T3-E1 cells in the presence and absence of Z-DEVD-FMK. The cells were incubated in either the presence or absence of 100 nM of Z-DEVD-FMK for 24 hours. Cell cycle distribution was evaluated by flow cytometry analysis. Cell viability was determined by the trypan blue
