Ping Sweep Tool Pros: Ping Sweep Tool
Cons: The installation process is pretty straightforward. You are given the choice between an automatic or manual installation. Though the process is quick and neat, you may consider using a different method if you are familiar with the standard Windows install in general. The interface is rather ugly. The interface is not that pleasant to look at even if it is not the most professional one. The materials used, the colors and many of the icons might appeal to some; however, it is nothing that will motivate you to enjoy using this program for long. The software is available in only one language. This limitation might not be a problem if the software can be used by non-English speaking users. Some users may even find it appealing that the program can be used in their native language. However, it may prove to be a bit annoying when your preferred language is not supported by the software. Ping Sweep Tool Verdict: Since this software is designed to give the user all the details about his network, it could prove to be a good alternative to that other overrated application that provides the exact same features. Its very simple yet attractive interface is not easy to handle. If you want a utility that will do the job, then you are bound to give this software a try. Nevertheless, if you are looking for a unique and professional interface, then you might not want to pick this one. Despite its shortcomings, Ping Sweep Tool is good enough for the job. 2 comments: Ping sweep is a great little utility to use. There are also several other ping utilities that you can download at www.networkspeaker.com. Ping sweep is not something you would use in the normal course of everyday operation, but it is nice to have in case you ever want to check the connectivity status of a system or a small group of systems with less than 5 or 10 machines. I like the ping sweep tool as well, you can also use it to check file sizes on a network drive, if you want to know what is the fastest way from point A to point B, it is also a good tool to keep on hand for emergencies or if you want to make sure no one is sending super sized file transfers from your company, you should run this tool on the http, ftp, smb, ics, and ftps ports.
