I believe I have implemented everything correctly as I have had no problems running the application at all in testing under my Windows 10 account. The application uses the C#.NET 4.6.2 framework. However, when I try to debug under my Windows 10 account, I get the message "A program is attempting to change the current user" and a "new" console window is spawned. It also frequently crashes at run time, for no obvious reason. I have been able to reproduce the problem on multiple Windows 10 machines by running my application under the Administrator account. I am currently using Visual Studio 2019 as my development environment. What could be causing my application to behave this way? Thanks in advance! A: Well, after testing with the Visual Studio development environment, I updated my development machine and reinstalled Windows 10 entirely. This resolved the error and my application now works as expected.
