SCPH-50004 EUR Con 0170 20030227 V9.p2b.epub[...] My question is if I can use the below line to do it or I have to create another column manually?

=IF([PageName]="f40dba8b6f (PS2), F40DB5263, SCPH-50004", "", [PageName]) A: You can achieve this through a combination of: Using an array formula and the IFERROR() function. If you wrap an array formula around the IFERROR function, it will return an array of "page names" and "" as a single result. Using INDEX/MATCH to reference a row-specific value for the page name. If you have a table of page names, you can reference them by matching row number against the page name value in that column. Using the function CELL() to reference a specific cell. This has the benefit that you don't need to use an array formula. So here's a VBA method of doing it: Sub InsertPages()

'Where the current page name is stored as string.
Dim CurrentPage As String With ActiveDocument.PageSetup 'Change to custom

Q: Identify incorrect view in if statement In my app I have a view - which I need to hide when an error occurs. I do this through a function. So what I do is: When an error occurs - I add a UIAlertView to the view and reload the view:

func errorOccurred(withTitle: String, errorMessage: String) { let alert = UIAlertView() alert.title = "Error" alert.message = errorMessage alert.addButtonWithTitle("Ok") alert.addButtonWithTitle("Cancel") self.view.window?.rootViewController?.presentViewController(alert, animated: true, completion: nil) self.view.window?.rootViewController?.reloadInputViews() }

And in my view I use an if statement to figure out if it was an error or it's just the view:

```
override func viewDidLoad() { super.viewDidLoad() if errorOccurred("Problem Occurred", "Please contact us", nil) { // code } }

The problem I am having is that every now and again - the view will still load with no error and then the if statement will say it is an error.
