They are a tiny country and a tiny place. Both in numbers and size, these two things are the same. Germans are more than 5% of the global population. Germany is also more than 5% of the global area. But these two things, 5% of population and 5% of area, are not the same thing. The world is a big place. It has over 7 billion people. And this makes the area of the world:  $7 \text{ billion} \times \frac{1}{5} = \text{over } 28 \text{ billion}$ . Roughly one person in 7 is a German. This means that there are about 280 million Germans in the world. This also means that one place in the world is shared by more than 280 million people. But if the world is a big place, how can it be shared by so many Germans? One place on the globe is shared by 70% of the world's population. The answer is geography. Germany has land borders with Czechia, Austria, Denmark, Poland, Slovakia, and Switzerland. It also has borders with France, Luxembourg, and Belgium. With these borders, Germany shares land with about 8.2 million people. And this can be compared to the fact that it shares land with roughly 288 million people. On the other hand, Germany
