Mouse Decoy Hit BLASTP hits obtained from randomly selected mouse proteins. Mouse Decoy Potential BLASTP hits obtained from randomly selected mouse proteins. To generate the SwissEMBL database, we used the following procedure: (i) Each SwissEMBL column representing a SwissProt accession was formatted such that the accession column contained only accession and decoy description, such as the original file name could contain the following information "SwissProt/accessions/111110/111110.hmm-ddmm-yy/DRK". The accession format was taken from the PIR download of the SwissProt database, as several researchers have reported that the PIR database has lower quality than the actual SwissProt database[@b9]. (ii) We retrieved all raw sequences for matched against SwissProt sequences using the PIR database. (iii) We parsed out the SwissProt accessions from all matches (positive targets) and for these accessions, we looked for the record with the highest similarity score and assigned this accession to the corresponding SwissEMBL accession in a process of cleaning up. (iv) Finally we have all accessions for the positive targets in SwissEMBL tables of the MaxQuant software. With just one exception, all of the accession numbers in the PANTHER and Protein Analysis Through Evolutionary Relationships (PANTHER) databases (Table 1{ref-type="table"}) match the accession numbers in the SwissEMBL database: the exception is accession number P0
