Jaguar Land Rover will reveal a new high-profile hire at its headquarters in Warwickshire this week. The car maker is keeping its head down and is not offering details at this stage, but the website Motor.co.uk can reveal the identity of the new hire - a media and branding expert. The £20,000 a year role is designed to support JLR's future plans for brand communication, digital campaigns and strategic direction. The company is also keeping quiet about another potential hire, a Senior Digital Marketing Manager for JLR, who could start in 2019, but is currently in advanced talks to join the business. The two roles suggest the car maker is putting itself in a position to make up for its historically conservative, old school image and aggressively looking to attract new customers. The trend in the sector has been towards a more fashionable, sporty image for cars as new models, such as the I-Pace and the Evoque, have mixed media advertising. JLR has been spruiking its recent 'extravagant' sponsorship of the Jaguar XJ and Land Rover Defender for its Land Rover Racing team, which has steadily been climbing up the FIA World Endurance Championship standings. Advertising has also been a priority at Land Rover's operations in Solihull, which are now the home of the firm's new headquarters, and the centre is also being pressed into 0cc13bf012
