Why do i have a zero balance when i withdraw from my account. At times, we may see that your home loan is left with zero balance. This is because your lumpsum amount was transferred to your home loan when you purchased your house. When we do a comparison of your home loan with your monthly instalments and your lumpsum amount and deduct the amount of monthly instalments that you make, we would usually see your mortgage balance 0. This happens because when we look at your balance sheet, we see the mortgage balance and your other loan liabilities are deducted. What is the effect of zero balance? When we have zero balance on a home loan, it means that your repayment of your home loan will be 100% done through your monthly instalments. There is no lumpsum amount required, hence the home loan is 100% debt free. This means that the next time you make a home loan you can opt for a higher amount as lumpsum amount requirement. And I know that
