Wednesday that they would need to review the bill before agreeing to release it. HealthCare.gov is more than a year late and is still not functioning, and the cost is more than $2 billion. Senator John Barrasso, Republican of Wyoming and a doctor, said lawmakers in the Senate had already decided to eliminate coverage for abortions for low-income women — a change that Democrats had hoped to remove from the bill. The change had been intended to cut the number of women covered by federal subsidies for insurance plans with fewer benefits. The bill also has attracted opposition from Democrats who want to preserve coverage of other procedures for low-income women, including maternity care, pediatric care, tubal ligation and routine colonoscopies. Democrats say the costs of the bill are likely to grow substantially by the time of the vote in the House, and they are warning about the long-term impact on the federal deficit and the number of people with private insurance. More than 10 million people are insured through the Affordable Care Act, but fewer than half of them are young people, ethnic minorities or people with severe medical problems. Democrats have tried to make coverage more affordable by saying that all Americans should be required to carry insurance under the new law, and they say that only about 26 million people are uninsured — far less than the 40 million who had been projected without the reforms. “Everybody already has health insurance,” said Senator Michael Bennet, Democrat of Colorado, who voted against the bill. “It is not a benefit that is attracting people to work at the minimum wage. They work because they have insurance.” Republicans have countered that the law is hurting small businesses and hurting the economy. They said that, even without the mandate, employers are continuing to offer insurance to employees. Democrats and Obama administration officials say the main problem is with the health insurance exchanges, which have suffered a series of glitches, leading e79caf774b
