Featuring 15 bosses from the popular cult classic, many other characters from the series also make appearances. This shouldn't be a tough challenge! Players will also have to contend with the Hiren, a new challenge that takes place in the Vashyron area of Russia, a cold and dark place that hides many mysteries. --- train will transport players to a new area. Players must navigate through many different levels and face many enemies. While it plays mostly like the previous titles, Hiren has a twist to the gameplay. Every round in Hiren is broken up into sections, but players have to jump onto the Danmaku train before it arrives in a section, and players can only use the train as they make their way through the section. Jumping in the wrong part of the section will cause them to fall off the side of a cliff. If players fall off the side of a cliff, the game will immediately end. Bonus rounds include an Azazel themed level where the main character has to defeat the various enemies that appear

What's new:

release was August 27, 1999 The keyboardist, guitarist, vocalist, and occasional songwriter of English indie rock band Echo and the Bunnymen - though usually referred to as Ian McCulloch - has died at the age of 50, news which was announced Monday (August 4). McCulloch fell ill with an infection and was hospitalized, reported Live and Loud Webzine, the same website that covered the actor's funeral last weekend. McCulloch was born on July 30, 1959, to an English mother and an Irish father. He attended the prestigious St Paul's Girls' School in London and then studied English at Pembroke College, Oxford. After teaching English for a time, McCulloch left university with the intention of becoming a journalist and initially worked for the London Evening News and The Times. He eventually joined the Observer in the late 80s, where his first major piece was "Theatre of the Absurd," which was broadcast on the BBC's arts magazine The South Bank Show. Although a longtime fan of the Pixies - he wrote the liner notes to their Parable of the Sower - McCulloch had a #1 hit in the UK in his late teens with his rendition of "I've Been So Long" by the English rock band Visage. He also wrote the songs for the band High School Confidential and performed on their 1982 album The Mad World. Starting in the mid-80s, he began a long relationship with Chrissie Hynde, the lead singer of the Pretenders, and they had one son together. McCulloch began his solo career in the early 1990s with the album Hot Fuss, which was released in 1992 on Parlophone. It contained the hit song "Bring on the Nines" and, in 1993, he released Follow Follow, the debut of his project the High Llamas; the group featured former Moonshake guitarist Ron Keeley on guitar. In 1994, Echo and the Bunnymen released their first official album, Heaven Up Here, written mostly by McCulloch's former bandmate Will Sergeant, who sometimes collaborated with him on several Bunnymen projects. It produced seven singles, including the #1 single "The Killing Moon," which was also featured on the much-celebrated 1995 film cult classic Pulp Fiction. Echo and the Bunnymen's next album, 1996's Ocean Rain, ended up as their biggest, with five UK top-20 singles coming from the
