Soundtrack. The present invention relates generally to an improved coke heating apparatus and more specifically to a coke oven charging bell for use with an oven having an oven door mounted to the upper end of a coke oven chamber or oven having a piston loaded through the door into the chamber. There are many devices which are used to charge the oven chamber of an oven. One of these devices is a coke oven charging bell which is normally positioned at the bottom of the chamber. Many of these devices have a cylinder extending upwardly from the bottom of the chamber and a piston positioned above the cylinder to be extended into the chamber from the cylinder. The piston and cylinder are normally spring loaded to move the piston upwardly as the cylinder is filled with oil. If the chamber is filled with coke, the forces of the coke on the piston moves it downwardly through the oil and into the oven. The devices that are used to move the piston into the chamber are normally spring loaded to move the piston downwardly. If it is desired to heat the oil, the spring loading must be released and the device must be manually pushed into the oven chamber to start the operation of heating the oil. The reason the devices cannot be continuously used to heat the oil is that the heat from the oil will cool the oil and when the oil is cooled, it will not move the piston into the chamber to provide pressure on the coke in the oven. Another type of coke oven which can be used with the coke oven charging bell of the present invention is a room and pillar type oven. In this type of oven, the oven chamber is normally located within an opening which extends upwardly from the floor of the oven. The oven door is normally mounted on the floor of the oven chamber and it is closed to form the oven chamber and an access opening through the door to the oven chamber. A piston with a cylinder is inserted through the door into the chamber to provide the pressure on the coke and provide a seal around the door to the oven chamber. This type of oven can be used with the device of the present invention. The coke oven chamber normally contains a heating tube which extends through the floor of the chamber to a location above the oven door. The oven door is not normally mounted on the top of the oven and it is disconnected from the heating tube c6a93da74d
