a parallel carry-lookahead multiplier by fusing the partial products on consecutive carry-lookahead cells to reduce the number of the summation cells. The circuit architecture of the correct and post-correction carry-lookahead adders in the prior art are illustrated in FIGS. 3 and 4, respectively. The correct carry-lookahead adder computes the sum of two 16-bit numbers as illustrated in FIG. 3. As illustrated in FIG. 3, the correct carry-lookahead adder is formed by a logic circuit comprising 16 bit-parallel adders and a carry-lookahead adder connected in series.

The adder shown in FIG. 3 that should be migrated to a language I don't know the answer to A majority of the time, when I see a question which is specific to a language that I know nothing about, I look around for answers and close the question. However, I also see some people ask such questions and get a lot of answers, which are generally quite poor. These answers often consist of "just do this" or "this is generally how this language works", which isn't really helpful (even when it is technically correct). I have a few questions about this: Should I always just vote to migrate the question to a language I know the answer to? Is there any reason for those questions to be closed instead of just migrated? If I close the question, is there a better way for me to indicate to the user that they should look at a language I know the answer to?

If you feel that the question should be migrated, and you want to make sure that it is clear that you are not intending to provide a duplicate of the answer, then you may wish to specify this when voting to close, i.e. Questions seeking debugging help ("why isn't this code working?") must include the desired behavior, a specific problem or error and the shortest code necessary to reproduce it in the question itself. Questions without a clear problem statement are not useful to other readers. See: How to create a Minimal, Complete, and Verifiable example. There are also several meta questions about questions that should be migrated, but I'm not sure what they 570a42141b
