The present invention generally relates to a system and method for message retrieval, and more particularly, to a system and method for storing, retrieving, and delivery of messages from one site to another. In recent years, the volume of mail handled by businesses and other organizations has increased dramatically, particularly as the size of the work force has decreased. This has produced a large number of incoming mails, oftentimes causing difficulties for the sender and/or the receiver to complete the intended activity. The corresponding challenges for the mail service facility where the incoming mails are received are well known, as is the need to provide a way to filter, route, and/or process the received mails. One known solution to this problem is to use the pneumatic tube delivery system described in U.S. Pat. No. 5,908,965, issued to Galer et al. and entitled “E-Mail Delivery System Using Pneumatic Tube Network”, which is incorporated by reference herein in its entirety. This patent describes a pneumatic tube based mail delivery system that includes a plurality of pneumatic tubes, one or more workstations, and an electronic mail station. The pneumatic tube system receives electronic mail messages from a user's mailbox and delivers the message to the electronic mail station. The electronic mail station includes a computer that receives the electronic mail message and prints it in a format that allows it to be retrieved by the user. However, a problem with this system is that incoming mails are delivered to the electronic mail station, rather than to a receiver or desired recipient who is intended to process the incoming mail. In addition, when the system described in the '965 patent is used, the e-mail may only be retrieved at the designated workstation, which is e79caf774b
