Adding layers Adding layers lets you create multiple versions of a photo, or even multiple versions of the same layer. A layer is an image that can be manipulated independently of other layers. To add a layer, follow these steps: 1. Choose the Layers panel's button in the bottom-right corner of the screen to open the panel. When the Layers panel opens, you may see a file named something like _test_1.psd_. This is the default file in the Photoshop CS6 folder, which is in your C: drive. 2. Select the New Layer button. You see the New Layer dialog box, as shown in Figure 15-6. Figure 15-6: Create a new layer. 3. Place your cursor over the New Layer dialog box, and when you see a small dot, click and drag the cursor across the New Layer dialog box to create a new layer. You create a new layer with a name, as shown in the dialog box. In this example, the layer name is document_settings. 4. With the new layer selected, choose Layer⇒Layer Style⇒Add Layer Style. The Layer Style dialog box opens, as shown in Figure 15-7. Figure 15-7: Add a layer style to the new layer. 5. Choose the Layer drop-down menu and then select Layer Style. The Layers panel adds the layer style. 6. Click outside the layer style so that it disappears. You can add any number of layers to any document, as many as you want to manipulate or to organize in separate files. Figure 15-8 shows a document that has 12 layers. Figure 15-8: Photoshop lets you create unlimited layers. Eliminating layers When you add a layer to a document, the layer is an object, and objects have properties such as name and location. You can display or hide the layer, as well as merge it with another object by using the Merge command. When you're done with a layer, you can remove it and get rid of the layer's properties, as well. To remove a layer, first select it. Then press Delete. Alternatively, if you don't want to delete the layer's properties, click the X in the top-left corner to hide the layer. To

The present invention relates to a thin-film magnetic head for use as a recording head and a reproducing head in a magnetic recording and/or reproducing apparatus and a method for manufacturing the same. The basic construction of a thin-film magnetic head is schematically illustrated in FIG. 6. As is shown, a slider 51 made of a ceramic or a titanium material is bonded onto a substrate 52 made of an aluminum alloy or an other material by means of an adhesive material 53. A structure is provided between the substrate 52 and the slider 51, including a magnetic pole layer 54 which is made of an amorphous magnetic metal alloy such as amorphous Fe-Ni and its protective layers, and a coil 55 wound around the magnetic pole layer. In such a construction, the magnetic pole layer 54 is constituted by a Cr/Fe-Ni film 57 stacked on an underlayer 56 composed of, for example, Al₂O₃·xSiO₂·yTiO₂. In the case of this kind of thin-film magnetic head, the surface of the Cr/Fe-Ni film 57 is rough because of the presence of voids (vacancies) which are created in the film. As a result, the protective film of Cr and Fe-Ni is insufficient at its surface for the purpose of corrosion resistance. Thus, the corrosion rate of the magnetic pole layer becomes high, with the result that the lifetime of the thin-film magnetic head is shortened. To avoid this problem, it is necessary that the surface of the Cr/Fe-Ni film 57 is made to be flat. For this purpose, an underlayer 56 is provided beneath the magnetic pole layer 57. The underlayer 56 is composed of Al₂O₃·xSiO₂·yTiO₂ or Al₂O₃·xSiO₂·yTiC. This type of magnetic head also includes, as magnetic coil, a conductor wire wound on a portion of the magnetic pole layer formed around the gap between the magnetic pole layers and exposed therefrom. The winding configuration of the conductor wire is such that a constant spacing is maintained between the conductive wire and the magnetic pole layer. In order to give a good recording waveform and a good reproducing output, it is necessary to thin the thickness of the magnetic pole layer in the vicinity of the air bearing surface thereof. As described
