Protected by a border of mountains, an army of people of the earth moved to the north of West Asia in the year 2054. Weapons and ships were built by people of the earth. They fight against alien ships coming from one of the planets and destroy those with their powerful weapons. However, they did not save the people of the earth. Trey Walton, a brave officer of the M.A.C.E. built his first spaceship, which was destroyed. His friends died in the fight against aliens and he lost his girlfriend. He wants to defend the earth against those aliens as he wants to be reunited with his girlfriend again.

I have been already for years a fan of 3D shooters. My love for this genre led me to the creation of the first arcade/action game "SPACE ADVENTURE" Starbyte is a retro-styled arcade platformer with many stages and enemies, inspired by such classics as Contra, Metroid and Kung Fu Champion. Starbyte is an arcade game, inspired by such classics as Contra, Kung Fu and Ninja Gaiden. Starbyte is entirely handcrafted, with use of pure retro-chic colors, old-school platforming and modern gameplay. Each level in Starbyte contains platforming challenges, that's filling your life bar, and gauntlets of deadly enemies to defeat. Starbyte uses modern game engine to provide good looking graphics and smooth gameplay. Controls: Arrow Keys - Move Z - Jump Spacebar - Crouch Left Mouse Button - Shoot You have to find your way in dangerous and mysterious castle, whose enemies are invulnerable and powerful, and whose guardian force, the Dagga, is a living embodiment of the monstrous, specially protected beast. Features: - 3D platformer gameplay, with solid controls - 17 levels with a lot of enemies and bosses - Over the top gameplay with the interesting power of the Dagga - Multiple

Hake Today Radio Monthly Archives: November 2017 If you think the quality of your questions is any indication of the quality of your organization, then chances are you're already running into a small problem with you know nothing about your users. The best questions aren't the easy questions. The best questions are the difficult questions or the deeper, more inward questions. In many ways, a good question is the answer to a host of different questions. The best questions allow you to dig a little deeper to find out more about their users' internal motivations and motivations for using your product or service. How does this help your business? What are the real needs of users that you wouldn't be able to detect just by looking at things like anecdotal feedback, data extrapolation, or analysis of your website's analytics? This kind of research isn't easy. It takes discipline, and there are a lot of pitfalls to guard against. But ignoring it is a bad idea for a number of reasons, one of which is that questions might save your business. One way you can answer questions is by asking them. Questions about the user or about your business are about the methodology of learning. The key to understanding users' behavior and understanding your product or service isn't a lot of data or analytic modeling. The key is human-centered design, which means getting into the mind of the user to understand what it is they want, how they want it, how they use it, and why they love it or hate it. You can do this via qualitative surveys and interviews, but they're not enough on their own. Rather, what's absolutely critical is that you follow up on research with investigative research. Investigative research is about following up on survey and interview answers with deeper research. You might learn that "57% of users like the functionality that this feature offers" despite a previous study showing that only "47% like its functionality." It's the kind of thing researchers have to go through to really know whether the margin for error is something small or something that they want to deal with in their business planning. If you're doing forms on your website or with your product, then maybe you ask the big questions right upfront: "What could we add to our form that would make you do this
