NODAGENWisdom of a Witch

Wisdom of a Witch is a 1977 American horror film directed by Jack Hill and starring David Soul. The film, the first in the Wisdom of a Witch series, is a contemporary sequel to the film The Curse of the Cat People (1944). It was followed by Angel From the Deep (1978) and the direct-to-video sequel Beastmaster: The Collision of Ages (1999). Plot Robert Comstock, director of the cat-covered film "Cat People From Outer Space", commits suicide. Twenty years later, the Comstocks' daughter, Tiffany (played by Lisa Carens), has become a leading scientific expert with a university. She is haunted by recurring nightmares about her father's murder. Michael, the Comstock's son, is managing and starring in the re-release of the "Cat People" film. He hires a mysterious private eye, Frederick Ludmuller, who warns Michael that other people are out to stop the film's release. Ludmuller, Michael, and Tiffany travel to a remote location and find remains of a burned-down house, a mummified cat and the remains of Jennifer and Dr. Branner, found by a lake. At Jennifer's grave, Tiffany finds a pentagram, an ancient symbol she associates with her father's research. In the meantime, Michael's friend, college professor Miles Hall, takes him to investigate a series of murders. Together with police officer Collie Taylor, they find a damaged trailer and a scared young man with a bandaged head. In the nearby woods, they find a strange, nearly decomposing, purple body. Michael is convinced that
