Osteoinductive biomaterials, which stimulate the formation of new bone in osteoporotic bone, are used clinically to increase the healing of fractures and osteotomies. The aim of this review is to describe the basic science, the clinical research, and the clinical application of these biomaterials. The currently used biomaterials that are based on the natural calcification and remodeling of bone are also described in terms of how they work. The experimental setting, which is the test model for the study of the osteoinductive biomaterials, is also described.Approaching Elephants: Taming the Fear of Being Close to Wild Animals Admission Prices Admission Fee Adults €5 Children €3 For people with disabilities access is free of charge. [A brief survey of skin rashes among children aged 3-11 years in Baiyunshan district, Guangzhou, from 2014 to 2018]. To understand the characteristics of skin rashes among children aged 3-11 years in Baiyunshan District, Guangzhou, from 2014 to 2018. A total of 9 263 children aged 3-11 years visited the township hospital for acute diseases in the past 5 years, and outpatients were investigated for their skin rashes. In 5 years, 8 870 cases of skin rashes were found in outpatients, and the incidence of skin rashes was 53.53% in children. The incidence of skin rashes in children was higher in 2013 (59.85%), lower in 2015 and 2017 (43.54 and 40.37%), and the peak incidence was at 4 years old (90.43%). The incidence of skin rashes was higher in boys (57.42%) than in girls (42.58%). The incidence of skin rashes was highest in April (54.45%), followed by August, January, and October. The incidence of skin rashes in children aged 3-7 years was higher than that in children aged 8-11 years. The most common type of skin rashes was jaundice and skin ulcers (37.76%). The incidence of skin rashes was higher in children aged 7-10 years (63.61%) than in children aged 4-6 years (50.21%). There was no significant difference in the incidence of skin rashes among children aged 4-6 years and 7-10 years ($P=0.375$). The leading causes of skin rashes were dermatological diseases (53.31%), bacterial infections (31.31%), and viral infections (16.14%). The major causes of skin rashes were dermatological diseases (47.80%), bacterial infections (30.80%), and viral infections (11.51%). Of the 493 cases of suspected acute exanthema, the pathogen identification rate was 96.02%. Of them, 87.13% were acute exanthema of syphilis. The most common type of dermatological diseases was rubella (55.34%), followed by viral infections (14.19%) and allergic diseases (14.14%). The pathogen identification rate was higher in children aged 3-6 years (98.71%) than in children aged 8-11 years (94.97%). There was no significant difference in the pathogen

What's New In?

The invention relates to a light path system for the illumination of panels, in particular panels in the doors of aircraft, comprising a light source and a light guide which has an inlet for the light of the light source and an outlet for the light of the light source, and which has an incident face and an exit face, whereby the light source is situated on the inlet side of the light guide, and the inlet for the light source is disposed on a side of the light guide facing away from the exit face. Light path systems of this kind are known from the prior art. These systems provide for the coupling of a light source, in particular an LED, with a light guide. The light source is usually disposed on one face of the light guide. The other face of the light guide has a cover or layer which makes the light guide optically visible. If the light guide is not optically visible, so-called "indirect lighting" is implemented. This function requires the provision of a light source on the face of the light guide which face is not covered by the cover. For indirect lighting, in particular, it is known to use an LED or other light source which emits via a fiber bundle. If the fiber bundle is disposed on a side of the light guide that faces the cover, so-called "direct lighting" is implemented. In some cases it is important to illuminate the panel, in particular, a door, not only in the immediate vicinity of the panel, but also at a distance from the panel. In that case a light guide is needed, in addition to the provision of the panel illumination. The light guide must be made optically visible for this purpose. In particular, the light guide must not emit light directly, but only indirectly via the fiber bundle. The publication entitled "Light Guidance in a Plane by Multiple One-Dimensional Use of Prismatic Dielectric Multilayers", by V. B. Prakriya and R. K. Govind, Applied Optics, Volume 37, No. 12, May 1, 1998, pages 2197-2203, shows a light path system for the indirect illumination of a door. A reflector is provided, which serves to "guide" the light emitted by an LED on a side of a light guide which faces away from the exit face and towards the panel. The light emitted by the LED is guided by reflection in the mirror on the side of the light guide which
