Dungeon Maze is a cooperative puzzle game for Microsoft Windows and Macintosh invented by David Bayless and Rob Machleidt. Gameplay The titular dungeon is a maze-like labyrinth, the goal of which is to get all the yellow-colored gems (the prize) to the escape room. There are multiple hazards. One is the obligatory snake-like monster, which attacks, and one can be injured by small explosives (bombs) or fire. Lighter-colored gems are needed to create explosives in increasing quantities. The game has alternate styles of playing, such as hide and seek and scavenger hunt. The main goal is to complete each maze on the maze deck, by finding gems (represented by their color) hidden in the maze itself or using clues to guide the player to gems which had been revealed when players place the stones in those places previously. The game begins with an easy set of 40 mazes (starting with numbers 33-62). As the game progresses, the mazes are a challenge to complete and grow increasingly difficult. The number of mazes the player must complete depends on how many gems have been collected. The gem-collecting gameplay is retained from the earlier Dungeon Lords, in which gems were essentially loot to collect. In Dungeon Mazes, there is an active gameplay requirement which involves adding gems to a special gem stack or "Burger". Gems in the Burger are termed "action gems" and can be used to detonate adjacent gems. There are three types of gem in the Burger: "ceiling gem", which are gems on the ceiling that help clear paths; "floor gem", which clear paths on the floor (or even between levels), and "door" gems. These gems have varying behaviors depending on their color. For example, red gems do not kick up, whereas yellow gems jump. Gems stack into sets of 3, 5 and 7. The gem packs are: 3 – ceiling; 5 – clear the upper 3 levels; 7 – clear the upper 5 levels; 10 – clear the upper 7 levels; 17 – clear all the gems. The Burgerette is required to maintain a player's score as well as other information on the player's hero. In-game money, which can be used to change loot into gems, is given as reward along with sometimes-limited level progress. In-game currency

Ride the catamaran with Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: The Fantastic Adventures of Captain Nemo comes to the Tango Cafe - the world's first Sherlock Holmes game! Do you dare board the catamaran? The catamaran comes complete with Holmes himself. He's played by Arnold Bax, the London theatrical actor who brought Holmes to life in silent movies in the early Twenties, and whose famous 1930s BBC Sherlock Holmes had a strong influence on the great Arthur Conan Doyle. Bax and a cast of the most famous Holmesians in the world on board the catamaran - actors, writers, and fans of Sherlock Holmes... The cast of characters will meet again in a variety of ways and places - all playing their part in a web of lies, deceit, and intrigue...
