What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2022 (version 23)?

Sheikh Ejaz Ahmed is founder of 'I Went Eight Miles' - to reach out to the persecuted religious minorities. Excerpts from an exclusive interview: You have been stopped by the British police and checked by Indian officials. How have you been treated in India? The fact that I was stopped is not necessarily a bad sign. But what happened was in my view, an abuse. An abuse of the law and probably also an abuse of human rights. I want peace and a harmonious and respectful coexistence between the two countries. There is no need for any quarrel between them, and there is no use for them creating tension between themselves. However, the Indian government is very clear about what it is trying to achieve. It wants to send a message to the Indian Muslims, particularly to the religious minorities. If there is a war or any violence, it doesn't matter whether it is the US, the Russians or the Chinese, but for India, it will be the responsibility of the Indian Muslims. They don't have anything to do with it. However, they need to start thinking about what kind of India they want. If the Indian government continues to prosecute me for what it claims to be some financial crime, and let me go the court again and then again, then that will send a message that an Indian is not respected by the Indian government. Are you worried about the situation in India, after such
