Visual relationships of two leaf positions of Angelica sinensis to herbivory by cabbage white butterfly. Angelicasinensis, Linnaeus (Apocynaceae), is an important medicinal herb in Taiwan. The herb is cultivated in order to obtain the root for medicinal use. Among the ecological resources of the herb, the butterfly herbivory is perhaps the most important factor. Therefore, mechanisms of herbivory resistance and susceptibility are highly demanded to improve the sustainability of the herb. In this study, we attempt to clarify which plant trait is essential to these mechanisms. We adopted the paired-sprinkled experimental design to compare the visual interaction between two plant positions (with or without) and leaf damage by cabbage white butterfly, Pieris rapae (Lepidoptera: Pieridae), as visual distances to proximity, to the positions of the plant. In this experiment, the leaf damage to the herb was significantly higher when the leaf was at the distal portion of plant. There was a short distance from the distal portion to herbivore access. This demonstrates that the herbivore preference for the plant is closely related to the plant leaf position. Moreover, the distal plant position is significantly more attractive than the proximal position in terms of their visual distance. In other words, the distal position is more attractive to the herbivore than the proximal position for increased herbivory resistance. In addition, the time spent on perching on the plant decreases when the plant leaf is closer to the distal position. These observations suggest that leaf position on plants is an important feature that can make differences in herbivore attacks. This study indicates that strategies such as plant position modification might be helpful to increase the herbivore tolerance for sustainable cultivation of Angelicasinensis. Q: Could a wearable LADAR sensor be used as an AR system? I'm coming from a Google Glass background, wondering if something like this could be used as an AR system to display information or answer questions? (I like the idea of having information overlaid on the world in 3D, but I'm not sure of the technical possibilities of such a system) A: Ok, so first thing. This prototype is from 2013. To estimate the prevalence of cardiometabolic risk factors in a black population living in the urban area of São Paulo, Brazil. A cross-sectional study was carried out in the urban area of the city of São Paulo with an adult population (age >20 years) and resident in the São Paulo metropolitan region. The "Health for the city" program was used as a sampling plan and a house to house census was carried out. The inclusion criteria for the survey were: age >20 years, self-declared black ethnicity and residence in the metropolitan area of São Paulo. The individual interviews took into account prior medical history, demographic data and socioeconomic class. Subsequently, body measurements, blood pressure measurement, abdominal, calf and hand circumferences were performed and blood and urine were collected for biochemical analysis. Data were analyzed with the SPSS package for descriptive statistics and the chi-square test was applied. Prevalence rates, confidence intervals, odds ratios and the Student t test were calculated. It was found that the overall prevalence of hypertension was 26.9% (95% CI: 23.4-30.9) and of obesity 26.2% (95% CI: 22.7-29.9). Diabetes was found in 5.5% (95% CI: 4.2-6.9) and pre-diabetes in 14.2% (95% CI: 12.5-15.9). The prevalence of overweight was 45.2% (95% CI: 42.1-48.4), abdominal obesity 19.0% (95% CI: 17.3-20.9) and hip circumference > or = 110 cm in 14.0% (95% CI: 12.5-15.6). The study found a high prevalence of hypertension and overweight in this black population and demonstrated that 37.9% of the population had at least one cardiometabolic risk factor.[ ~~~
