This study analysed the effects of the strategic mix of traditional and innovative techniques on soil, vegetation and water resources in the Houhai wetland of the 4°52'-4°60' N latitudes, Beijing City, China. A typical marshland was divided into four major landforms (soil, vegetation, water resources and wetland area) and these were comprehensively treated using modern, historical and innovative techniques. The results indicated that a mature and well-developed marshland was the optimal soil to water (SW) ratio of 7:1, while a ratio of 1:1 was optimal for a residential area. The optimal ratio of the four landforms was 12:2:12:1 for vegetation. The innovative traditional methods (with a ratio of 2:1:2:1) were best for soil productivity and critical water resources, whilst the historical traditional methods (with a ratio of 4:4:4:2) were best for vegetation and water productivity. Thus, a strategic mix of traditional and innovative methods can lead to a balanced mix of ecological, natural and economic efficiencies.Perinatal influenza immunization of a human chorionic gonadotropin transgenic mouse model. We examined whether progesterone, a major ovarian hormone, impairs influenza virus infection. Swiss-Webster dams received progesterone (100 mg/kg body weight) on day 0, 6, 12, and 17 of gestation, and ameliorated progesterone-induced immunosuppression by boosting innate immunity. Pregnant dams on day 17, and their offspring on postnatal days 7 and 14, were exposed intranasally to mouse-adapted influenza A virus (A/Puerto Rico/8/1934, a strain not affecting humans). Postnatal progesterone treatment enhanced antibody responses against A/Puerto Rico and not A/PR8/34. Pups born from dams receiving progesterone on day 0, 6, or 12, but not 17, had enhanced influenza antibody titers compared to age-matched, 648931e174
