Previous studies identified that patients with selfinjurious behavior had an increased risk of suicide ([@B36]; [@B39]; [@B53]; [@B17]). One study found that patients with neurodevelopmental disorders (NDDs) had a higher prevalence of suicide, lower age at suicide attempt, and higher suicide risk before the attempt. Similar to the findings of two other studies that also investigated NDDs ([@B33]; [@B28]), our study showed that children with ASD had higher levels of suicide risk during their diagnostic process and at follow-up compared to patients with ADHD and TD. The higher suicide risk of patients with ASD may be attributable to their more impaired and severe emotional disturbance, and their highly-impulsive behaviors might prompt them to attempt suicide ([@B29]; [@B3]). It was reported that young adults with ASD had a higher suicide rate than those with other psychiatric disorders ([@B35]). A recent study on patients with ASD found that the suicide rate in individuals with ASD was 13.7% between 2004 and 2014 in Taiwan ([@B58]). In this study, we also observed a remarkably high risk of self-injury in children with ASD compared with those with ADHD and those with TD
