An Arlington, Virginia, man who allegedly assaulted a police officer after a drunken confrontation with fellow bikers at the same park where motorcycles crashed last month has been acquitted of assault, and one of the bikers has been acquitted of assault. A judge in Fairfax County, Virginia, on Thursday acquitted a motorcyclist accused of repeatedly punching two officers at the scene of a 2016 fatal biker brawl and heading into a field where other bikers were frantically pulling at the bodies of their dead and dying friends and family. Commonwealth's attorney Dan Storck said the motorcyclist, Joseph Tesone, had punched the two officers, one of whom was knocked to the ground, more than 30 times. "The officers, despite the fact that they knew what was going to happen when they pulled him off of the motorcycle, that they would get assaulted, actually thought they were protecting themselves," Storck said. The officers received blows on their heads, backs and shoulders and received what Storck called "significant" injuries, which was acquitted of voluntary manslaughter and other charges. He was also acquitted of assault on a law enforcement officer and destruction of property. The other motorcyclists involved have been cleared of the charges 6d1f23a050
