Mashup of my 5 top favorite Instagrammer's that I love for different reasons :

Jenson I met Jenson when he was on an amazing US Top Model casting (not sure what he is doing now though but I hope he is doing good) and from that point on we have been friends. He is absolutely gorgeous and he's super sweet in real life. I follow him because he consistently posts images of his happy adventures and is one of the most positive person on Instagram. Vitalii I used to follow him from his New Year's Eve on Magic City. He makes great photos and I'm always in love with his photography style. I love how he is confident enough and he is always up to capturing the moment. Anna She has a great eye for detail and she is always in the moment. I like her space shots, the ones with the people, and the ones with quotes or poems. She's talented and very spontaneous and funny in real life. I love following her. Jestelle She's one of my favorite Mexico City instagrammers and I love that she's so artsy. She's so creative and always posting great images and entertaining quotes. I love how she highlights her location and take pride in being the place she is in. Giovanni I discovered him through Vanessa Hale's instagram. He is absolutely gorgeous and I love his photos. He always has a great upbeat disposition and gives the best advice. I love that he has a really interesting and creative point of view on life. I love following him for his snaps and for the advice he always gives. What do you think? "You can take yourself so seriously but then you turn around and realize that you are not in control, that you are just an observer. You have no choice in your life." – my grandma What are your thoughts on this? I'm loving this comment section so far! Love this power of words and their ability to transform people! Gold has been the best performer over the past week. But since gold is not the best performing asset class in a prolonged bear market, it's not a surprise that gold has outperformed. I expect that fundamentals will be one factor which will eventually curtail gold's good run. 2. China's Stock Market Indexes The Shanghai Composite and the China Enterprises Index recovered some ground last week, trading in the +20% and +21% range. The CSI300, however, remains in the red. Each measure of the China market has been discounting the equity bubble in the form of the terminal phases of the bull market. I expect the shares market to slip down in Q2 and Q3 of 2011, which is why the China stock market will be the primary vehicle where the weak dollar will commence to play out. This is the same reason I believe the dollar is overbought. 3. Global Stocks The S&P 500 fell -2.8% last week and currently trades in a 12-month value vs. the 100-day moving average (MA) of roughly 650. (The RSI is displaying a balance in the 50-75% zone (no bullish divergence)). The reading of this chart supports the notion that the market is trading in range. According to Economy.com, global stocks are bullish. 4. Oil The futures market continues to sell into lower highs and lower lows. The CME ratio of NYMEX/Brent (the ratio of NYMEX to Brent crude) at $63 vs. $62.5 at the closing bell last week (at last week's close, the ratio was at $61.50). Oil futures continue to sell into bad news. 5. The Dollar Index The dollar was last seen at 98.51 (and currently trades around 98.45) vs. the euro at $1.4062. The dollar was last seen at 1.1339 (and is currently trading at 1.1349) vs. the Japanese Yen at 120.06. The safe haven rally of the yen serves to partially underpin the dollar. I expect dollar strength to be offset by inflation, excess liquidity, and a weak dollar, which will be the primary driver of the commodity currencies (GBP, CAD, AUD, and NZD). 6. US Housing Mort
