online experience. Q: Resolving ambiguous relation-set between two instances of the same entity I am having a hard time finding an answer to what could be considered an easy question. Say I have a set of classes with the following inheritance hierarchy: A -> B -> C Then I have one instance of class A, say a. I now try to resolve a relation between a and B. I do this by calling `A.getRelatedSet(B)`. However, if I call `getRelatedSet()` again of a different instance, for instance b, I get `a.getRelatedSet(b)`. Here's the error: `org.hibernate.HibernateException: More than one row found for singleton` The documentation for "`getRelatedSet()`" says (emphasis mine): Return a `{@link org.hibernate.collection.PersistentSet}` instance of all the objects in the inverse join of the given object in this association. If the given object is in the inverse side of a bidirectional association, this method returns the join of the associated collection, and not the inverse join. So I'm not sure if the documentation is wrong, but I would have expected b to be returned. Can anyone please clarify this for me? Update: So I'm going to clarify that I do want both sets of objects, and that the part that does not make sense to me is why there is more than one object with the same identifier to resolve. A: So there actually is a solution to this question: You can call `Hibernate.getCurrentSession().merge(a)`. So the result will be one of the objects in the relatedSet. I was just a bit confused by the documentation. Q: Writing C code inside a python package I have a Python package that I'm creating using the built-in `setup.py`. It includes a single Python file and three C code files. I would
