I'm not new to programming, but I know when I get a SafeThreadException, there must be something important wrong that's going on. It's rare, but it's happened a few times. Basically, I have a background worker that loads text into a RichTextBox. On the main thread, the text is parsed and based on the parsed results, I want to update the content of the rich text box, but only on the main thread. Thus, I did a BackgroundWorker. If I try to access the rich text box on the BackgroundWorker thread, I get a SafeThreadException. Now, here's the problem: The exception only occurs in the first place that I try to update the rich text box. For example, I have an event that's fired in the background worker. If that event fires on the main thread, it works perfectly. If I try to access the rich text box before that event, it works perfectly. But as soon as I try to access the rich text box after the event, it starts throwing an exception. Is there something wrong with my code, or something wrong with the BackgroundWorker? A: It seems like your background worker is not raising the ProgressChanged event for every change that it makes to the rich text box. You might have to rethink how you are using the background worker. If you need to make very frequent changes to the text (say updates every x milliseconds), using a timer to trigger the background worker might be the best solution. Also, I would suggest you use Invoke to update the UI thread, otherwise if you have access to it, you could use the dispatcher to do the same thing. Q: JavaScript.append() not working as expected I have a JavaScript code which submits a form when a button is clicked, and then redirects to another URL when a new button is clicked. This part is working fine. The problem is when I click the new button, it redirects to the URL again and doesn't append the new form data. My code is below, any help will be appreciated.

Have To Do Remove Ustred Download Crack Hidden Â· ishwar piracy dvd ipod touch 8.1.2 keygen. Any help? A: If you notice the log file the first line indicate that the syntax for the cron job is wrong. The correct command would be:  [-f /etc/nginx/sites-enabled/your.domain.com] &&

Where first line in the log message: [FAILED] Concatenate two asterisk together:  [-f /etc/nginx/sites-enabled/your.domain.com] &&  [! -f /etc/nginx/sites-enabled/your.domain.com] && The last line would only execute if the contents of the file /etc/nginx/sites-enabled/your.domain.com is false. Also see if the cron job is working by echo $PATH If cron is not echo $PATH | grep cron If cron is working echo $PATH | grep cron You should have  [-f /etc/nginx/sites-enabled/your.domain.com] && Q: Managing app versions on Google App Engine What is the recommended way to manage versions of an app in Google App Engine. I can think of ways to do this. One, you just manually edit the version section on app.yaml file in app-engine-web-app/YOUR_PROJECT. It's like version 1.2.3. Or, you can use git as a version control system. Which one is the most recommended. Another thing is, app engine is an application programming interface. And the versions are rolled-out as a free feature so I am confused how do I manage versions in the tool?

A: You could use Google Code for instance. When you update a version of your app, you upload the code as a new version of the app to Google Code.
