The all-new web series from Robert Kirkman and Sean Martin continues, premiering this week with the introduction of the first new group within the study, the "Vivian Lake Posse".[33] Within the online version of the book, the show's creators have cited Howard Hawks' film The Big Sleep as an inspiration.[34] The first episode, "The Posse", began the series with the introduction of the main characters.[35] Most episodes end with members of the Posse accepting a dangerous mission, using aliases, in order to protect themselves and their identities.[36] The series follows their misadventures, using the study as a safehouse and taking them on missions for the "Heron Society", an overarching group whose goals are not always clear.[37] Many characters and plots are based on real-life societies from societies around the world.[38] Many themes have dealt with racial, sexual, and religious ideologies, notably the "Colossus of Color". The series is structured around a larger concept that the show's creators hoped to achieve in the first episode - that in a bad situation there is a point of no return from which it is difficult to change, and that the only way for some people to avoid disaster is to
