All of the above information is informative. if not a specific "sales" message, then optometrists' games are played by uninformed on what the hospital is expecting to get in return from us. Do you know what is going on in the ophthalmic community? People making money off of the ODs, and a lot of cheap community ODs are more than willing to work their way around and take advantage of the situation. It is well-known that not many customers like to visit the same OD office and get the same services as well as the same care. Even if you love the OD, if they are offering a bunch of unnecessary procedures, they are not likely to see you again. Same idea if an OD is offering you a bunch of products that are more expensive than normal and make you really wonder why they are the most expensive OD in town. So, ODs usually do not show up when it is time to be "sold". They are usually expected to run their game in your favor. Now, after you have found a OD you like, your job becomes getting the insurance company to reimburse you. If your OD charges by the hour, your insurance company is not going to pay them by the hour. They are going to pay you a rate, usually based on your practice size. If you charge an hourly rate, then you need to read your insurance carrier's policy. Your carrier may or may not let you bill based on a flat rate. If you just charge a fee to see a doctor, your insurance company usually rates you based on your claim history. This is called the "Cycle". Read your insurance carrier's policy, and as long as you are doing what they want, your will be reimbursed. This is what they call the "cycle". The insurance companies like to know what their members are doing with their money so they can create a "Cycle". This "Cycle" is any number of years. So, the insurance company is able to reimburse an OD that gets full reimbursement in 2 years; however, an OD that works the other way around will have to
